Cybercrime Awareness Case Study & Prevention Guide

Case Study: Cyberbullying Among College Students

Cyberbullying is when people use the internet to scare, threaten or hurt others. They do this on media, messaging apps or online forums.It is different from bullying because it can happen all the time and the person doing it can hide behind a fake name.A cyberbullying incident often starts when someone posts something like a picture or what they think.The bully might start by leaving comments for everyone to see.Then things can get worse. They might make fake accounts to pretend to be the person being bullied.

They might share information or edited pictures and send lots of mean messages.Some people who get bullied online are college students and teenagers.These are often people who seem lonely do not feel good about themselves or're not like everyone else.

People who share a lot about their lives online might also get bullied.Cyberbullying can have results.People who get bullied might feel stressed, anxious or sad.They might not do well in school.In cases it can make them not want to be, around people or even hurt themselves.The internet record of the bullying can also hurt someones reputation for a time.

This shows why it is important to be online tell someone if you see mean behavior and make the internet a supportive place to prevent cyberbullying.

We need to be careful and help each online. Cyberbullying is a problem that we need to solve.
